Our Children: Going Astray or Led Astray?

American puppeteer and filmmaker Jim Henson once said, “Kids don’t remember what you try to teach them. They remember what you are.” Towards the end of November, news about cigarettes, alcohol, drugs and other items found in the school bags of children in Bengaluru sent shockwaves to the collective conscience of teachers, parents and the society at large.

As per the news reports, the Associated Managements of Primary and Secondary Schools in Karnataka (KAMS) had asked schools to start checking students' baggage as a result of rising complaints about pupils bringing mobile cell phones to school. However, a surprising discovery was made during the unexpected luggage check that involved pupils from several Bengaluru schools. Authorities discovered cigarettes, alcohol, lighters, excess cash, and whiteners in the luggage of pupils in grades 8, 9, and 10 in addition to cell phones.

Discussions, soul searches, and hue and cry about the responsibility of parents and teachers began to flood the media soon after the reports surfaced. Questions such as ‘Is our younger generation going astray?’, ‘Who is responsible for the moral degradation?’, ‘What can we do as a society to turn the situation around?’, caused a much-required societal brainstorming.

While taking stock of the situation is quintessential to bringing about change and transformation, experts suggest concerted efforts and actions from everyone concerned. Positive accompaniment, timely assessments, and counselling are the need of the hour. The policy makers and those in the corridors of power need to ensure that the media and the content distributed over various platforms for general consumption, is child-friendly.

In Pursuit of a Goal...

Success Story

From the by-lanes of poverty to the corridors of hope, Raju's (name changed) journey of 10 years has taken him through moments of distress but also seasons of promise. A native of Tamil Nadu, 10-year-old Raju has seen separation, sickness and death, all in the time span of a few years. Eight years ago, Raju's parents had left their home in Tamil Nadu and moved to Bengaluru, leaving him in the care of his grandmother, where he felt cared for and protected but without the certainty of a better tomorrow. During his stay with his grandmother, Raju was not enrolled in any school, and when his grandmother's death brought him to Bengaluru to his parents, what he had to look forward to did not seem any better than what he had left behind.

Raju's parents were vegetable vendors in KR Market and the streets of the market often doubled as their home and refuge. Raju has an elder brother, Shivaji, and two younger sisters, Soundarya and Shivashakthi, but what made their challenging circumstances often intolerable was the chronic kidney disease that their father suffered from. The disease and its treatment consumed a sizeable share of their mother's time, strength and resources, and what was left was not nearly enough to take care of four children. Gradually, he began to accompany and assist his parents in their daily job of selling vegetables, till he was found by the BOSCO CHILDLINE team.

After gauging and understanding the family's situation, Raju was referred to BOSCO Mane for care and protection as per the order of the Child Welfare Committee (CWC).

When Raju first came to the centre in June 2020, it was with the baggage of a disrupted childhood. He had behavioural and anger issues, tended to trouble other children and also struggled with his academics.

Raju was first enrolled in the Bridge Course. Later, was enrolled in the Government Kannada Model Higher Primary School, Chamarajpet, in the 3rd standard.

During the second wave of the pandemic, Raju's mother requested permission to take the child home with her, but even after going home, Raju was regularly given counselling over the phone and motivated to attend the educational classes aired over the TV channel Chandana. The family was also provided with ration kits to minimize the impact of the pandemic on the child.

When the schools reopened, Raju was once again put through bridge education for a few weeks prior to joining mainstream school again.

In the academic year of 2022-23, Raju was moved to St. Joseph's Higher Primary School in Cottonpete. He is now a 4th-standard student who takes an active interest in studies as well as all the other activities organized in school and at the centre. Raju is a good dancer and a talented sportsperson.

He was an active participant in the various events organized during the month of the Feast of Don Bosco and won many prizes during the Sports Day organized by BOSCO, but the one thing that captures his imagination the most is football. He diligently practices the sport every day and confidently sees dreams of becoming a footballer when he grows up as he is taught each day to take the limits off his tomorrow.
